PREFACE

This report lists the plants certified by the Foreign Programs Division, Meat and Poultry Inspection Program, Food Safety and Inspection Service, as eligible to export meat products to the United States. The plants are listed by country, along with the plant number, address, and date of review.

Twenty veterinary medical officers with considerable experience in the domestic meat inspection system conduct periodic onsite reviews of foreign plants to assure that the same standards of inspection are enforced as in federally inspected U.S. plants. The frequency of onsite review is determined by plant size, nature and complexity of operations, and anticipated volume of exports to the United States. Plants that export large volumes or are of special concern are reviewed at least four times annually; other certified plants are reviewed at least once a year.

Although visits are announced, the Foreign Programs officers are trained to consider this factor when making evaluations. They conduct independent, in-depth surveys of every feature requiring inspection, checking the same items reviewed by supervisory inspectors in U.S. plants. During 1982, Foreign Programs officers made 2,254 reviews of certified plants.

The action taken when deficiencies are reported depends both on the nature of the deficiencies and on the foreign government's response to them. If no health hazard is involved and the particular deficiency is corrected immediately, shipment of products is not usually interrupted. However, in cases of serious deficiencies or when previously requested corrections have not been made, the FSIS administrator may remove the eligibility of a plant to export to the United States. If the Administrator determines that the problem is systemwide, the export authorization may be removed from all certified plants in the system; or, if more appropriate, an embargo may be imposed on products from that country. These requirements would be effective until the Administrator is satisfied that standards comparable to U.S. requirements were again being enforced.
